

I work overnight shift while my wife works day so I have to tend to my three children in the daytime. I also have to try to get some sleep during that time. I am constantly awakened by annoying telemarketers who don't seem to understand the phrase "no thank you". I was even convinced into using a service after numerous rejections and I finally caved in. But I didn't even use the service and I wasted lots of money. These telemarketers are trained to (con)vince even the most persistent of people into services they don't need. We need not only to stop the annoying calls but protect consumers from greedy companies. Please keep the TCP Act in tact.
